Dear Parent/Carer,

A year ago we wrote to you inviting your child to take part in a national research project called My Resilience in Adolescence (MYRIAD), along with the rest of his or her class.

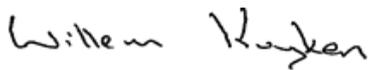

Your child's school has agreed to work together with the University of Oxford to take part in this project, which is looking at wellbeing and resilience during adolescence. All participants, including pupils, teachers and the school, will be made anonymous in all research reports and all the data collected will be kept strictly confidential.

We are writing to you again as the classes progressing onto the next stage of the project have now been allocated and your child's class has been selected. These classes were selected randomly and were not affected by how pupils answered their last set of questionnaires. It's time for the next round of measures to be collected and the researchers from Oxford will be coming to your child's school to collect this information. If your child participated last year, they are going to be asked if they are happy to continue with the project. You or your child can choose to withdraw from this data collection at any time. If you previously let the school know you don't want your child to take part, they will not be approached.

If you would like to see the full list of questionnaires your child will be asked to complete, please go to the following webpage: <http://myriadproject.org/questionnaires/>. If you are not able to access this webpage or have any questions about these measures, please email or call the contact in the yellow box below.

Thank you for taking the time to be involved in the MYRIAD project, which has the potential to inform decisions affecting the pupils of the future.

Yours faithfully,

Professor Willem Kuyken (Chief Investigator)

Elizabeth Nuthall (Trial Manager)
